

CHATEAU LA MISSION HAUT-BRION

Château Laville Haut-Brion 1999

Château La Mission Haut-Brion's tasting notes :

One is first struck by the color of this wine and its complex aromas. Its hue is a lovely and bright pale greenish yellow, which prepares one for a nose of intensely aromatic freshness. But the wine gradually reveals a bouquet that is astonishing in its complexity. On the initial attack, the familiar muskiness of Sauvignon is fully expressed, but this gives way to a touch of anise and opens up to a panoply of exotic fruit flavors like mango and kiwi. And then this first impression fades away, allowing the Sémillon to shine through, with layers of beeswax, incense and honey. The entire impact is lively, complex and very long on the finish.

Current vintage notes

The last year of the millennium will be remembered for several extraordinary meteorological events. First came the eclipse of the sun on August 11th. The second phenomena consisted of two extremely violent storms that struck the Sud-Ouest. One came on August 7th and was severe but short lived and the second struck on December 27th with an unprecedented violence. It lasted from sundown until the wee hours of the morning with the hiatus being between 8PM to 10PM. It wreaked havoc on the entire region. Ultimately, 1999 was a relatively hot year and 2% warmer than the mean temperatures recorded during the past forty years. This is a considerable difference. For the most part the year will go down as one with brutal climactic events. July was dry with the exception of three days of violent storms. In a few hours the rainfall surpassed 35% of the usual July precipitation. The rain continued at the beginning of August but the weather changed abruptly at the time of the eclipse on August 11th. For one month not a drop fell. September 20th suddenly torrential rain returned spilling 79 millimetres in one day, a quota that entailed 125% of the usual rainfall for the entire month of September.
